Sub:- Online teaching–learning for the benefit of the students of the university

Sir/ Madam,

The departments and colleges of the University of Delhi are conducting online teaching-learning from the third week of March onwards and there has been considerable enhancement of the quantum of students availing this facility over this period of time, across the departments and colleges, which is encouraging. However, it has been noticed that there is a need to further strengthen and augment this exercise in the greater benefit of the students.

The Covid-19 task force of the university appeals to the departments and colleges to carry out interactive, online teaching in all the courses in the ongoing semesters. Some of the tools for this purpose are Google Hangout, Google Meet, Google Classroom, Microsoft teams, Zoom and Discord. This will help students understand the course content better and will give them an opportunity to clear their doubts. The basic teaching material as per the syllabus of the courses may please be provided on the College/Department websites so that the students can study, prepare well for their future endeavor and make the best of the loss of classroom activities.

The university departments are requested to help the colleges with online teaching-learning process, if needed. Since the departments have helped the colleges in preparing and moderating the respective undergraduate courses, the heads of the departments are requested to nominate a faculty member to coordinate with the colleges to have the basic reading material in each course of the ongoing semesters in undergraduate programme available on the department website as well. Joint classes by two-three teachers from same/different colleges/university departments may be organized to enrich the experience of the students. Additional lectures may also be organized for the benefit of the students.

DUCC may be contacted in case of any problems or queries with regard to online teaching-learning process.

Wish you all good health and pray you stay safe.

Thanks and regards
The Covid-19 Task Force Members, DU
